

1. Have you ever been in a situation where you had to represent a group, a company, or even your family, and felt completely out of your league or underqualified? What happened?

2. When it comes to talking with others about your relationship with God, what has been your experience? Do you tend to do this easily or do you find it awkward or difficult?

3. We asked the question - What if I'm not good enough? Share with the group how/if this fear has been part of your narrative about sharing your faith. What makes that fear so easy to believe?

4. The next "What if..." was about not having the right answers. When someone brings up faith, do you ever freeze up worried they will ask a question you can't answer? As you think about what it might look like to simply share your own experience, how might that change things?

5. We saw in Amos' story that people didn't always listen and we thought about our own "what if people don't listen" question. How much does this question play into your experience of talking about God with others? Would it change things if you viewed their reaction as between them and God, rather than a reflection of you?

6. It's easy to compare ourselves to someone who we see as more articulate or charismatic and feel like our own giftedness falls short when it comes to being a witness of our faith. What is an ordinary skill, interest, or life experience you have that God might use as your unique lens?

7. Looking at the four questions—Not good enough, Don't have all the answers, Others won't listen, Not gifted enough—which one tends to be the biggest hurdle for you personally? What is one truth or shift in perspective that can help you release that fear this week?

8. Being a witness isn't about giving a formal presentation; it's simply sharing where you've seen God show up. What is one chapter of the story between you and God—a time He showed up in something beautiful, or carried you through something difficult—that you can share with the group right now?

9. Think about the people in your everyday sphere (coworkers, neighbors, family, friends). What is one small, pressure-free step you could take this week to say something about you and God with a heart of willingess—leaving the results up to God?
